NEW QUESTION: 3Which of the following threat types can occur when an application does not properly validate input and can be leveraged to send users to malicious sites that appear to be legitimate?A. Insecure direct object referencesB. Unvalidated redirects and forwardsC. Sensitive data exposureD. Security misconfiguration*Answer: BExplanation:Explanation/Reference:Explanation:Many web applications offer redirect or forward pages that send users to different, external sites. If these pages are not properly secured and validated, attackers can use the application to forward users off to sites for phishing or malware attempts. These attempts can often be more successful than direct phishing attempts because users will trust the site or application that sent them there, and they will assume it has been properly validated and approved by the trusted application's owners or operators. Security misconfiguration occurs when applications and systems are not properly configured for security--often a result of misapplied or inadequate baselines. Insecure direct object references occur when code references aspects of the infrastructure, especially internal or private systems, and an attacker can use that knowledge to glean more information about the infrastructure. Sensitive data exposure occurs when an application does not use sufficient encryption and other security controls to protect sensitive application data.

NEW QUESTION: 4 Fill in the blank with the appropriate term. _____ lists important messages about security and maintenance settings that need attention.Answer: Action Center Explanation: Action Center is a central place to view alerts and take actions that can help keep Windows running smoothly. Action Center lists important messages about security and maintenance settings that need attention. Red items in Action Center are labeled Important and indicate significant issues that should be addressed soon, such as an outdated antivirus program that needs updating. Yellow items are suggested tasks that a user should consider addressing, like recommended maintenance tasks.
