NEW QUESTION: 4The MOST important reason for formally documenting security procedures is to ensure:A. alignment with business objectives.B. objective criteria for the application of metrics.C. auditability by regulatory agencies.D. processes are repeatable and sustainable.Answer: D
Explanation:ExplanationWithout formal documentation, it would be difficult to ensure that security processes are performed in the proper manner every time that they are performed. Alignment with business objectives is not a function of formally documenting security procedures. Processes should not be formally documented merely to satisfy an audit requirement. Although potentially useful in the development of metrics, creating formal documentation to assist in the creation of metrics is a secondary objective.
