NEW QUESTION: 2Which description of the following is true according to the information shown in the figure?A. RTB will not have the 10.0.0.0 network in its routing table.B. RTC will not have the 10.0.0.0 network in its routing table.C. RTC will not have the 192.168.10.0 network in its routing table.D. RTB and RTC will not have the 10.0.0.0 network in their routing tables.

Answer: BExplanation:Distribute lists are used to control routing updates. A distribute list allows an access-list to be applied to routing updates. When you configure an access list and use it with a distribute list routing updates can be controlled no matter what their source is. Access list should permit the networks that you want advertised or redistributed and deny all networks that you want to remain hidden. Router then applies the access list to routing updates for that protocol.RTC will not be able to access the 10.0.0.0 network, because will not have the 10.0.0.0 network in its routing table. With ACL 10 RTB permits routing updates to be sent to RTC for network 192.168.10.0/24 and because of the implicit deny rule at the end of any ACL, update for 10.0.0.0/8 network will not be allowed by the ACL.
