NEW QUESTION: 2Select the option that helps in sharing Account Rules across applications.A. Reference ObjectsB. Transaction ObjectsC. Same Chart of AccountsD. Same Value Set validationAnswer: A*Explanation:To share an account rule across applications, all sources used by the account rule must be available for the event class.If the sources are available, an account rule is assigned to a journal line rule in the journal entry rule set, and verification occurs to confirm that all sources used by the account rule are available for the journal line rule accounting event class. Journal line rules are only available if the sources are shared; such as reference objects.Note:You may share account rules across applications in the following ways.
*Assign an account rule from the same or a different application to a journal line rule in the subledger journal entry rule set. For example, to derive an expense account for journal line rule Expense, assign the Projects Cost Account rule owned by Oracle Fusion Projects to the Payables journal line rule Expense.
*Create an account rule based on an account rule from another application and assign it to a journal line rule. For example, you may create a new account rule Invoice Expense Account referencing Project Cost Account assigned in the Priorities region. You may attach the Invoice Expense Account rule to the journal line rule Expense in the journal entry rule set.Reference: Fusion Applications Help, Sharing Account Rules across Applications
