Explanation:You can tune your rules by adjusting the instance count and match accuracy to make it harder or easier for content to match the rules. Each sensitive information type used in a rule has both an instance count and match accuracy.To make the rule easier to match, decrease the min count and/or increase the max count. You can also set max to any by deleting the numerical value.To minimize the number of false positives, we need to increase the minimum match accuracy.A sensitive information type is defined and detected by using a combination of different types of evidence. Commonly, a sensitive information type is defined by multiple such combinations, called patterns. A pattern that requires less evidence has a lower match accuracy (or confidence level), while a pattern that requires more evidence has a higher match accuracy (or confidence level).Reference:

NEW QUESTION: 3As a cloud-native developer, you have written a web service for your company. You have used Oracle Cloud Infrastructure (OCI) API Gateway service to expose the HTTP backend. However, your security team has suggested that your web service should handle Distributed Denial-of-Service (DDoS) attack. You are time-constrained and you need to make sure that this is implemented as soon as possible. What should you do in this scenario? A. Re-write your web service and implement rate limiting. B. Use OCI API Gateway service and configure rate limiting. C. Use a third party service integration to implement a DDoS attack mitigation. D. Use OCI virtual cloud network (VCN) segregation to control DDoS. Answer: B

Explanation: Having created an API gateway and deployed one or more APIs on it, you'll typically want to limit the rate at which front-end clients can make requests to back-end services. For example, to:- maintain high availability and fair use of resources by protecting back ends from being overwhelmed by too many requests- prevent denial-of-service attacks- constrain costs of resource consumption- restrict usage of APIs by your customers' users in order to monetize APIs You apply a rate limit globally to all routes in an API deployment specification. If a request is denied because the rate limit has been exceeded, the response header specifies when the request can be retried. You can add a rate-limiting request policy to an API deployment specification by: using the Console editing a JSON file
