NEW QUESTION: 1A company is testing a web application that runs on Amazon EC2 instances behind an Application Load Balancer. The instances run in an Auto Scaling group across multiple Availability Zones. The company uses a blue/green deployment process with immutable instances when deploying new software. During testing, users are being automatically logged out of the application at random times. Testers also report that, when a new version of the application is deployed, all users are logged out. The Development team needs a solution to ensure users remain logged in across scaling events and application deployments. What is the MOST efficient way to ensure users remain logged in?
A. Enable session sharing on the load balancer and modify the application to read from the session store.
B. Store user session information in an Amazon S3 bucket and modify the application to read session information from the bucket.
C. Modify the application to store user session information in an Amazon ElastiCache cluster.
D. Enable smart sessions on the load balancer and modify the application to check for an existing session.
Answer: C

NEW QUESTION: 2You have a server named Server1 that runs Windows Server 2012 R2. You create a custom Data Collector Set (DCS) named DCS1. You need to configure Server1 to start DCS1 automatically when the network usage exceeds 70 percent. Which type of data collector should you create?
A. A performance counter data collector
B. A configuration data collector
C. An event trace data collector
D. A performance counter alert
Answer: D
Explanation: Performance alerts notify you when a specified performance counter exceeds your configured threshold by logging an event to the event log. But rather than notifying you immediately when the counter exceeds the threshold, you can configure a time period over which the counter needs to exceed the threshold, to avoid unnecessary alerts.
