You configure the outgoing email settings on Server1 to use the SMTP service on Server2. You need to ensure that email messages from Server1 are forwarded to users. What should you do? A. On Server2, create a new application pool, and then associate the application pool with a new Web site. B. On Server2, configure the SMTP service to accept anonymous connections and to relay email messages. C. On Server1, create a new application pool. On an internal DNS server, create a new MX record for Server2. D. On Server1, create a new application pool. On an internal DNS server, create a new MX record for Server1. Answer: B Explanation: You can configure the SMTP service to accept relayed email from servers in your farm. You can decide to accept relayed email from all servers except those you specifically exclude. Alternatively, you can block email from all servers except those you specifically include. You can include servers individually, or in groups by subnet or domain. You can enable both anonymous access and email relaying but by doing this, you increase the possibility that the SMTP server will be used to relay unsolicited commercial email (spam). Reference: Configure outgoing email settings (Windows SharePoint Services)
