NEW QUESTION: 1 On a debian system which of the following would build a boot disk?
A. mkboot /dev/floppy
B. mkboot --device /dev/fd0 2.4.18-12
C. makeboot --device /dev/fd0 2.4.18-12
D. mkbootdisk /boot/vmlinux-2.4.18-12
E. mkboot /boot/vmlinux-2.4.18-12
Answer: B
Explanation: mkboot creates a boot floppy appropriate for the running system. The boot disk is entirely self-contained, and includes an initial ramdisk image which loads any necessary SCSI modules for the system. The created boot disk looks for the root filesystem on the device suggested by /etc/fstab. The only required argument is the kernel version to put onto the boot floppy. Syntax: mkbootdisk [options] kernel version. By default mkboot creates the boot disk on first floppy device. If you want to specify the device use the --device option. In debian you should specify the kernel filename which resides on /boot.
