NEW QUESTION: 4Your network consists of a single Active Directory domain. The domain contains a server named Server1 that runs Windows Server 2008 R2. All client computers run Windows 7. All computers are members of the Active Directory domain. You assign the Secure Server (Require Security) IPsec policy to Server1 by using a Group Policy object (GPO). Users report that they fail to connect to Server1. You need to ensure that users can connect to Server1. All connections to Server1 must be encrypted. What should you do?
A. IPsec policy to all client computers.
B. Restart the IPsec Policy Agent service on Server1.
C. Assign the Client (Respond Only) IPsec policy to Server1.
D. Assign the Server (Request Security) IPsec policy to Server1.
Answer: A
Explanation: You've assigned a policy that requires security, but have not configured clients with an IPsec policy to respond to these requests. So the simplest fix is obviously to deploy a Client (Respond Only) policy. This needs to be assigned to all client computers that will connect to Server1, not to Server1 itself.
WRONG ANSWERS Server (Request Security) would conflict with the existing Require Security policy, and could potentially allow clients to communicate that are not encrypting. The purpose of the policy agent is to retrieve IPsec policy information and pass it to the other IPsec mechanisms that require that information to perform security services. (MY NOTE: Although IPsec communication is not working, we have no indication the clients have been assigned a policy, so we shouldn't worry yet about the Policy Agent) Reference:
