NEW QUESTION: 3 You work in a company which uses SQL Server 2008. You are the administrator of the company database. Now you are in charge of a SQL Server 2008 instance which is named Instance01. Instance01 contains a database which is named SellingHelp. There is the Products table in the SellingHelp database. Now according to the company requirement, the Products table has to be replicated to the SQL Server instances installed in laptops computers. You have to create a Replication topology to perform this. The Products table is updated from Instance01 when the laptops reconnect to the corporate network. The Products table on Instance01 is frequently updated between reconnections. You must make sure that you can implement the Replication topology along with the Subscription types successfully and meanwhile reduce the bandwidth usage to the least. So what action should you perform to achieve this goal?A. You should implement the Transactional Replication topology along with a Pull SubscriptionB. You should implement the Snapshot Replication topology along with a Push SubscriptionC. You should implement the Snapshot Replication topology along with a Pull SubscriptionD. You should implement the Merge Replication topology along with a Pull Subscription.Answer: D
Explanation: Merge replication, like transactional replication, typically starts with a snapshot of the publication database objects and data. Subsequent data changes and schema modifications made at the Publisher and Subscribers are tracked with triggers. The Subscriber synchronizes with the Publisher when connected to the network and exchanges all rows that have changed between the Publisher and Subscriber since the last time synchronization occurred. Merge replication is typically used in server-to-client environments.
