Answer: B,D

NEW QUESTION: 2 Which two advantages does CoPP have over receive path ACLs? (Choose two.)
A. Only CoPP can rate-limit packets.
B. Only CoPP applies to IP packets and non-IP packets.
C. A single instance of CoPP can be applied to all packets to the router, while rACLs require multiple instances.
D. Only CoPP applies to receive destination IP packets.
Answer: A,B
Explanation: Explanation/Reference: Control Plane Policing CoPP is the Cisco IOS-wide route processor protection mechanism. As illustrated in Figure 2, and similar to rACLs, CoPP is deployed once to the punt path of the router. However, unlike rACLs that only apply to receive destination IP packets, CoPP applies to all packets that punt to the route processor for handling. CoPP therefore covers not only receive destination IP packets, it also exceptions IP packets and non-IP packets. In addition, CoPP is implemented using the Modular QoS CLI (MQC) framework for policy construction. In this way, in addition to simply permit and deny functions, specific packets may be permitted but rate-limited. This behavior substantially improves the ability to define an effective CoPP policy. (Note: that "Control Plane Policing" is something of a misnomer because CoPP generally protects the punt path to the route processor and not solely the control plane.) Reference:

NEW QUESTION: 3 ARP poisoning is achieved in _____ steps
A. 0 B. 1 C. 2 D. 3
Answer: D
Explanation: The hacker begins by sending a malicious ARP "reply" (for which there was no previous request) to your router, associating his computer's MAC address with your IP Address. Now your router thinks the hacker's computer is your computer. Next, the hacker sends a malicious ARP reply to your computer, associating his MAC Address with the routers IP Address. Now your machine thinks the hacker's computer is your router. The hacker has now used ARP poisoning to accomplish a MitM attack.
