NEW QUESTION: 1 Welche der folgenden dynamischen Routing-Protokolle sind Distance Vector-Routing-Protokolle?A. IS-IS B. RIP C. BGP D. EIGRP E. OSPF*Answer: B,D

NEW QUESTION: 2 Which statement about the feasible distance in EIGRP is true?A. It is the metric that is supplied by the best next hop toward the destination.B. It is the maximum metric possible based on the maximum hop count that is allowed.C. It is the maximum metric that should feasibly be considered for installation in the RIB.D. It is the minimum metric to reach the destination as stored in the topology table.Answer: D*Explanation:An EIGRP router advertises each destination it can reach as a route with an attached metric. This metric is called the route's reported distance (the term advertised distance has also been used in older documentation). A successor route for any given destination is chosen as having the lowest computed feasible distance; that is, the lowest sum of reported distance plus the cost to get to the advertising router. By default, an EIGRP router will store only the route with the best (lowest) feasible distance in the routing table (or, multiple routes with equivalent feasible distances).Reference. <http://packetlife.net/blog/2010/aug/9/eigrp-feasible-successor-routes/>
