Affirmative Action plans*D. Whistleblower prevention*E. Employment contracts*Answer: DExplanation:Explanation: A due diligence process during a merger should focus primarily on recording the following basics of company employee details: documentation regarding employee names, employment contracts, I9 forms, benefit contracts, compensation information, company policy and procedures (such as handbooks for employees), compliance documentation for equal opportunity, information about company labor relations (including labor activity), all information about potential legal situations (such as legal violations, sexual harassment claims, and disputes about employee terminations), and legal compliance documentation for COBRA, FMLA, WARN, and OSHA. This means that answer choices A, B, D, and E all fall within the boundaries of due diligence for a merger, leaving only answer choice C. What is more, whistleblower prevention is not necessarily legal - as there are a number of laws designed to protect whistleblowers - so a company could not legally retain or utilize whistleblower techniques.
