NEW QUESTION: 1 Which of the following is NOT an issue with secret key cryptography? A. Secure distribution of the keys. B. Security of the certification authority. C. Compromise of the keys can enable the attacker to impersonate the key owners and, therefore, read and send false messages. D. A networked group of m users with separate keys for each pair of users will require $m(m-1)/2$ keys. Answer: B Explanation: The CA is used in public key cryptography, not secret key cryptography. A CA will certify that a public key actually belongs to a specific individual and that the information associated with the individual's key is valid and correct. The CA accomplishes this certification by digitally signing the individual's public key and associated information. The certification professes to another person who wants to send a message to this individual using public key encryption that the public key actually belongs to the intended individual. The Consultation Committee, International Telephone and Telegraph, International Telecommunications Union (CCITT-ITU)/International Organization for Standardization (ISO) X.509 Authentication framework defines a format for public key certificates. This structure is outlined in Figure.image012 Answer "A networked group of m users with separate keys for each pair of users will require $m(m-1)/2$ keys" is an important issue in secret key cryptography; therefore it is not the correct answer. If, among a network of m users, each user wants to have secure communications with every other user on the network, then there must be a secret key for each pair of potential users. This concept can be illustrated with five users as shown in Figure.image014 Thus, with five users, the number of independent keys is equal to $(5 \times 4)/2$ or 10 as depicted by the ten connecting lines in Figure A.6. *answer "Secure distribution of the keys" is incorrect since securely distributing the keys to all users is, obviously, a very important requirement. Answer d is incorrect since a compromise of the keys can, indeed, enable the attacker to impersonate the key owners and, therefore, read and send false messages.
