NEW QUESTION: 2Which statement is true?A. The collector manager can run both javascript and proprietary Collectors simultaneously. It functions differently for the different collector types.B. Each Collector Manager can run only one type of collector - javascript or proprietary. You must choose one option when installing the collectorC. Each collector manager can run either Javascript or proprietary Collectors, but only one type at a time. You can configure this in the configuration xml file.D. Each collector Manager can run either Javascript or proprietary Collectors, but only one type at a time. You can configure this in the Event source Management interface.Answer: D*Explanation:Note:*Collector builder: An Integrated Development Environment (IDE) for building custom Collectors to collect from unique or proprietary systems *Proprietary Collectors, written in Novell's own language, always use variables based on the short tag to refer to event fields. The short tag name must be prefaced by a letter and underscore, where the letter indicates the data type for the field (i_ for integer, s_ for string). *JavaScript Collectors usually refer to event fields using an "e." followed by the same user-friendly label set in Event Configuration in the Sentinel Control Center. For a Sentinel system with a default configuration, for example, the Initiator User Name would be referred to as "e.InitUserName" in the JavaScript Collector.
