NEW QUESTION: 1 Click the Exhibit button. The exhibit shows an IPsec tunnel configuration. In an effort to increase the security of the tunnel, you must configure the tunnel to negotiate a new tunnel key during IKE phase 2. How can the configuration be changed to accommodate this requirement?
A. A new tunnel key cannot be negotiated in IKE phase 2 with route-based IPsec VPNs; a policy-based IPsec VPN must be used.
B. A new tunnel key is negotiated by default during phase 2; no configuration change is necessary.
C. PFS must be added to the IPsec policy.
D. PFS must be added to the IKE policy.
Answer: C
Explanation: PFS is a method for deriving Phase 2 keys independent from and unrelated to the preceding keys. Alternatively, the Phase 1 proposal creates the key (the SKEYID_d key) from which all Phase 2 keys are derived. The SKEYID_d key can generate Phase 2 keys with a minimum of CPU processing. Unfortunately, if an unauthorized party gains access to the SKEYID_d key, all your encryption keys are compromised. PFS addresses this security risk by forcing a new DH key exchange to occur for each Phase 2 tunnel. Using PFS is thus more secure, although the rekeying procedure in Phase 2 might take slightly longer with PFS enabled.
