NEW QUESTION: 4You are working on a virtual guest design for the deployment of a critical business application.The software vendor has provided you with some projected workloads. One of the project requirements is to ensure that business application performance is guaranteed. Which of the following would be the best approach for guest configuration?A. Configure the virtual guest with a reservation, as specified, as the projected initial workload requirement.B. Configure the virtual guest with a reservation, as specified, as the minimum requirement for the application to run.Answer: AExplanation:Allocated resources are shown in the guest operating system and are not guaranteed. The amount depends on the unreserved resources available at the time. Assuming no functionality issues, you can configure a production application to be guaranteed its projected workload, and the system should deliver. Without a reservation, there is potential for a performance impact if there is contention.
