NEW QUESTION: 3Which two statements best describe Cisco IOS IP SLA? (Choose two.)A. provides active monitoringB. measures delay, jitter, packet loss, and voice qualityC. only monitors VoIP traffic flowsD. only implemented between Cisco source and destination-capable devicesE. statistics provided by syslog, CLI, and SNMPAnswer: A,B*Explanation:Cisco IOS IP SLAs allows you to montior, analyze and verify IP service levels for IP applications and services, to increase productivity, to lower operational costs, and to reduce occurances of network congestion or outages. IP SLAs uses active traffic monitoring for measuring network performance. IP SLAs can be configured to react to certain measured network conditions. For example, if IP SLAs measures too much jitter on a connection, IP SLAs can generate a notification to a network management application, or trigger another IP SLAs operation to gather more data. IP SLAs includes the capability for triggering SNMP notifications based on defined thresholds. This allows for proactive monitoring in an environment where IT departments can be alerted to potential network problems, rather than having to manually examine data. IP SLAs supports threshold monitoring for performance parameters such as average jitter, unidirectional latency and bidirectional round trip time and connectivity. This proactive monitoring capability provides options for configuring reaction thresholds for important VoIP related parameters including unidirectional jitter, unidirectional packet loss, and unidirectional VoIP voice quality scoring (MOS scores). For packet loss and jitter, notifications can be generated for violations in either direction (source to destination and destination to source) or for round trip values. Packet loss, jitter and MOS statistics are specific to IP SLAs Jitter operations. Notifications can also be triggered for other events, such as round-trip-time violations, for most IP SLAs monitoring operations.
