NEW QUESTION: 2A company has developers located in Eastern Europe (EE) and a QA Department in Bermuda.* The company is planning to create an environment based on a blueprint of 4-8 virtual machines for each of the developers and one for every QA project.* The proposed configuration will allow each developer to work independently and be able to collapse and re-create the environment as needed.* QA Teams will be able to recreate the environment that is required for a specific application.* Individual virtual machines in the blueprint are being continually updated with newly available software packages.* The company is planning to use the vSphere Content Library to store images and synchronize them between sites.Which four supported configurations can the company implement? (Choose four.)A. A minimum 10 GbE connection between EE published and Bermuda subscribed libraries is required.B. EE and Bermuda vCenter Servers with Enhanced Linked Mode.C. EE and Bermuda vCenter Servers without Enhanced Linked Mode.D. FTP protocol to transfer data between published in EE and subscribed in Bermuda libraries.E. Published library in EE backed by an NFS file system while subscribed library in Bermuda is backed up by datastore.F. EE and Bermuda libraries that are backed by an NFS file system.Answer: B,C,E,FExplanation:You can eliminate C and E as FTP isn't supported natively and without more information there is no need for a 10GbE connection. 1GbE may suffice. Not to mention a 10GbE connection between EE and Bermuda would be nearly impossible and if it even is that would be completely cost-prohibitive. At that point it's cheaper to move your entire QA team to EE - or even better, move your whole operation to Bermuda.10Gbps is not a requirement, and you can only store the items either on VMFS or NFS:
