NEW QUESTION: 1 Two students are testing the effect of light intensity on photosynthesis. They place a green aquarium plant inside a clear glass container of pond water and turn on a floodlight located three feet away. Bubbles of oxygen soon come from the plant. Then, the students move the floodlight a foot closer to the glass and leave it for ten minutes. Exhibit: Which of the following statements represents the BEST prediction about the aquarium and its contents? A. The rate of bubbling increases. B. The bubbles come from the lower parts of the plants. C. The bubbles come from the upper parts of the plants. D. The bubbles decrease in size. E. The plant is floating on the surface of the water. Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2 Which describes how a client reads a file from HDFS? A. The client contacts the NameNode for the block location(s). The NameNode then queries the DataNodes for block locations. The DataNodes respond to the NameNode, and the NameNode redirects the client to the DataNode that holds the requested data block(s). The client then reads the data directly off the DataNode. B. The client queries the NameNode for the block location(s). The NameNode returns the block location(s) to the client. The client reads the data directory off the DataNode(s). C. The client queries all DataNodes in parallel. The DataNode that contains the requested data responds directly to the client. The client reads the data directly off the DataNode. D. The client contacts the NameNode for the block location(s). The NameNode contacts the DataNode that holds the requested data block. Data is transferred from the DataNode to the NameNode, and then from the NameNode to the client. Answer: B Explanation: 8.2.4. HDFS Client User applications access the filesystem using the HDFS client, a library that exports the HDFS filesystem interface. Like most conventional filesystems, HDFS supports operations to read, write and delete files, and operations to create and delete directories. The user references files and directories by paths in the namespace. The user application does not need to know that filesystem metadata and storage are on different servers, or that blocks have multiple replicas. When an application reads a file, the HDFS client first asks the NameNode for the list of DataNodes that host replicas of the blocks of the file. The list is sorted by the network topology distance from the client. The client contacts a DataNode directly and requests the transfer of the desired block. When a client writes, it first asks the NameNode to choose

DataNodes to host replicas of the first block of the file. The client organizes a pipeline from node-to-node and sends the data. When the first block is filled, the client requests new DataNodes to be chosen to host replicas of the next block. A new pipeline is organized, and the client sends the further bytes of the file. Choice of DataNodes for each block is likely to be different. Reference: <http://www.aosabook.org/en/hdfs.html>

NEW QUESTION: 3What occurs if multiple collections are configured for the same attribute group and are distributed to the same Managed System?A. The data is only collected once by the last distribution.B. The data is collected multiple times but does not impact summarization.C. The data is collected multiple times and summarization will be skewed.D. The data is only collected once by the first distribution.Answer: C
