NEW QUESTION: 3 Your network contains a System Center 2012 Configuration Manager environment. You create two custom client agent settings named ClientSettings1 and ClientSettings2. You apply ClientSettings1 to all of the client computers in the sales department. You apply ClientSettings2 to all of the client computers in the marketing department. The client computers in the marketing department contain several custom registry settings. You need to collect the custom registry settings from the marketing department computers. What should you do? A. Edit ClientSettings2 and exclude the custom registry information. B. Edit the default client agent settings and include the custom registry information. C. Create a new set of custom client agent settings for the marketing department and include the custom registry information. D. Edit ClientSettings2 and include the custom registry information. Answer: C Explanation: It is common sense, that you just add another client setting and deploy it to the collection. Why? All settings can be separately deleted and especially named. Easier to handle.
