NEW QUESTION: 1What is one of the most common drawbacks to using a dual-homed host firewall?A. The ACLs must be manually maintained on the host.B. Internal routing may accidentally become enabled.C. The examination of the packet at the Network layer introduces latency.D. The examination of the packet at the Application layer introduces latency.Answer: B
Explanation:A dual-homed host uses two NICs to attach to two separate networks, commonly a trusted network and an untrusted network. It's important that the internal routing function of the host be disabled to create an application-layer chokepoint and filter packets. Many systems come with routing enabled by default, such as IP forwarding, which makes the firewall useless. The other answers are distracters.
